"Quality of employment : the overlooked dimension of european social policies"

Vielle, Pascale ; Borelli, Silvia

ABSTRACT

The concept of quality of employment had been approached in the European Union under the European Employment Strategy – i.e. under soft law -, but echoed the long European and national legal traditions of labor law. This study underlines the importance of the law in the debate on quality of employment - which until now has paid little attention to a legal and normative approach - and proposes some paths for the improvement of European social law in order to fit in better with international and legal standards.

CITE THIS VERSION

The European Journal of Social Law (EJSL) is an academic peer-reviewed journal dedicated to the dissemination of internationally excellent research on developments, trends and challenges in labour law and social security/welfare law at the European and international levels.

EJSL analyses the expanding field of social law at the European level in its complex and dynamic interconnections with general developments in the integration process and in the construction of the European polity. In particular, the journal’s focus is on the impact of the market freedoms and other general principles and policies of the European Union on national and European social values and rights.

EJSL focuses both on the theoretical and constitutional dimensions of these developments and on the systematic analysis of legislation, case-law and new policy trends in European labour law and social security law.
Instructions for Authors

The Editors will be happy to discuss drafts and proposed contributions. We particularly encourage contributions dealing with new developments, trends and challenges in labour law and social security law/welfare law at the European and international levels and the impact of the market freedoms on national and European social values and rights. Analytical articles as well as case commentary are welcomed.

All contributions should be submitted in house style. More information can be found on the following website: www.ejsl.eu

In general, contributions should be submitted with an abstract of 100-150 words in length. The length of the articles usually varies between 10,000 and 15,000 words including abstract and footnotes. Articles should be submitted in English.

All contributions are assessed anonymously and in their entirety prior to publication by international qualified experts. Within 4 weeks you will be informed about the outcome of the Peer Review.

The journal publishes only original contributions to scholarship which have not already been published or accepted for publication elsewhere. Contributors should confirm with the editors that this is the case, upon submission of their paper for publication with the journal. Material already accepted for publication in the journal should not subsequently be submitted for publication elsewhere, either in print or electronic form, without the consent of the editors.
